

What is the exchange about?

MOSAICO encourages all its participants (youth and adults) to promote developmental issues and to stand up for the realisation of a sustainable future all over the world.

All participants are required to act in the spirit of social citizenship and spread their knowledge and abilities back in their environment and respective home countries. All educational exchanges through MOSAICO are required to follow these objectives and hence are aimed at investigating matters of social justice, environmental compatibility and economic performance of future generations. This “triangle of sustainability” provides a variety of topics and main focuses: whether it is a debate on how to strengthen action and decision-making on a political level or a joint theatre performance by all partaking students.

At all times the dimension of development policy, dependencies and interceptions among the North and the South remain the main focus of global learning in the international circle.

Partnership

We give a great importance to the fact that the exchange takes place between partners. We expect participants and trainers our projects work together as one on the content and activities of the project. On an equal footing and in mutual understanding all parties should investigate the topics of discussion and create a positive environment for training.

In order to maintain a high level of exchange and communication between the countries, all the groups are required to be similar in size, terms of age and parity of gender.

MOSAICO emphasizes the sustainable nature of projects which asks for a long-term partnership and a topic that potentially covers an equally long period of time. A return encounter of the partner group should be an objective. All participants should be trained and encouraged to act as multipliers in education on development policy.
